

Vote Green (and why you're afraid to)

What is democracy worth if you can't vote for candidates you believe in who have values you respect? Unfortunately, the current winner-take-all two-party system encourages people to vote not for their actual choice, but the major party candidate they hate the least! If you vote for your first choice, you may wind up "spoiling" the election for your second choice.

The Green Party supports an electoral reform called Instant Runoff Voting that will fix this problem. IRV eliminates the spoiler effect by letting voters rank their preferences, requiring a majority to win (unlike the current system, where the winner often doesn't have a majority mandate), and effectively carrying out run-offs automatically. It is an easy way to strengthen our democracy and make voting more honest and accurate. All voters owe it to themselves to ask their government representatives why we don't have IRV.

Greens also support Proportional Representation, which would mean that if your party gets 30% of the vote, it would receive 30% of the City Council and school board seats. Sounds reasonable, doesn't it? In many municipalities in Delaware County, the second-largest party doesn't have any role in the government at all. That doesn't sound like democracy, does it?

Register Green

Registering Green indicates your support for the party whose values you respect. Beyond the symbolic value, registering Green has two real-world effects: 1) when 15% of the voters in Pennsylvania are registered Green, the Green Party legally becomes a major party, with various legal advantages such as automatic ballot access; 2) you cannot vote in major party primary elections while registered Green.

You can register as a Green Party voter in any county in Pennsylvania. If you are not currently registered to vote, get a voter registration form from your county voter registration office. If the party registration box does not contain a check box for the Green Party, your county is using an outdated form; write in "Green" on the "other" line and make sure your county officials know that you should be recorded as a member of the Green Party.

If you are already registered to vote, and you wish to switch parties, use the usual voter registration form, but in Box A, check "change of party".

Run Green

Calling all elected officials and potential candidates! In many municipalities, the major parties offer little in terms of networking and issue leadership to their local elected officials. Why not join the party whose values you share? Active Green organizations across Pennsylvania are working to revitalize democracy in our cities, boroughs, and townships.

One by one, we are building a vibrant group of Green office holders in Pennsylvania -- local officials who care about ecology, justice, and democracy in their communities. Consider joining us.

One of the things that makes America great is choice and competition, but we don't have that in one of the most important and expensive services that we purchase -- our government. We have dozens of cereals to choose from at the store, but we effectively have just two, and often just one, choice when we vote. Let's give us, the voters, something else to chew on, and keep our leaders honest.

About the Green Party

The Green Party is a real political party that you can register for, vote for, and run for. Most importantly, it's a grassroots party that you can work with and become a leader in.

Some people mistakenly think that the Green Party is an environmentalist group. In fact, it is a political party based on ten key values: social justice, grassroots democracy, non-violence, ecological wisdom, decentralization, community-based economics, feminism, respect for diversity, personal and global responsibility, and future focus. If you like the sound of these values or are willing to give them a chance but want to know more, why not come to a meeting, email us, or learn more on the web?

The Democratic and Republican Parties have increasingly become parties driven by big money, not by the grassroots. The values that once inspired these parties are needles in a haystack of corporate dollars.

The Green Party is small but growing rapidly. There are 224 Green office holders in the US, including city council members of major cities and a number of mayors. The Green Party did not even exist in Delaware County in 2000, in 2001 there were 23 registered Greens, and in 2004 there were 596.
